jen: Hey how did it go?! and any word on my wallet?
me: no word on the wallet yet me: but meeting went extraordinarily well jen: =)
jen: did you "get the job?"
me: basically me: the deal is me: they're still trying to get a topic/episode approved for the pilot me: they presented some story on drug legalisation with all the segments written out and whatnot me: and the execs turned that down and told them to come up with something else me: I'm thinking that they probably didn't do a bang-up job me: so I sold them on this Vanderbilt/neo-Nazis/RS McCain story I've been working on, and they'll present that as an option next jen: good luck!!!
me: thanks, how was your day?
me: did you have to go to the bank and whatnot?
jen: not today
jen: I'll go tomorrow.
jen: if the wallet will be recoverable, it will likely be tonight.
jen: else i'll do it tomorrow jen: and my day wasn't bad jen: thank you for asking ;) jen: Glendolyn and I are going to walk to some restaurant 10 blocks away and have dinner in a bit. I might go running on the west side bikeway later jen: and made progress on getting paid =) me: very well, that's nice that they might actually pay you for your labors me: I'm having Straub make me chicken plus Curtis is still forcing me to eat various obscure junk food items jen: ic
jen: =)
jen: did you eat the chips?
me: not yet, going to incorporate them into a chicken dish along with turkey bacon jen: mmm jen: sorry I drank too much last night and if I was mean to you jen: I think I fucked up our "friend" situation.

me: I don't really care me: just try to remain calm in the future jen: remain calm?
me: as opposed blacking out, insulting me for several hours, and threatening to sue me for allegedly using you in my cyberpunk novel, yes jen: well, the last part was a joke =) jen: and I'm sorry I insulted you me: very well jen: I don't like how things go though me: well, we can talk about these things in the future, preferably sober, and perhaps without any sarcasm jen: well, sober yes. but sarcasm is a useful thing jen: i know these things, i'm a dancer remember?
me: yes, yes
me: sarcasm can certainly be useful me: anyway me: let's try to keep drama to a minimum jen: I'm feeling like this "relationship" is tipping towards causing me more pain than happiness me: well, if there's anything I'm doing that's causing you pain, please let me know jen: it's just a personality mis-match
me: very well
me: we're broken up, so whatever you want to do is fine jen: well, that's just a phrase. what we do is the issue jen: I'm not sure I can deal with your introversion jen: and I'm not sure you can deal w/ my extroversion me: then you need to decide what you want to do, then; last night you wanted to come over and have sex and argue and we did that me: so, if you me: would prefer not to those things,then don't do them jen: ok jen: but I do want to do them and that is the problem i'm referring to jen: except less of the arguing jen: i prefer teasing you jen: and I won't have a juvenile "friends w/ benefits" thing jen: I don't fuck my friends jen: as a general rule jen: to keep them my friends me: well, the ball's in your court jen: it's not a tennis match
me: at any rate, decide what you want and then do that jen: thank you

jen: that was helpful jen: (this is sarcasm)
me: (gotcha)
jen: going to dinner. maybe talk later =) jen: hope you're having a good night jen: and thank you for being so fair about this
